

At Schools:

Mentoring Heads of Social Science.

With 38 years of experience as the Head of Economics and Business Studies at a Leading Independent School, I am confident in my ability to make a difference for the Head of Social Science/Business Studies/Economics. Over the years, I have employed creative techniques to infuse excitement into this role.

- I'll share, that the Head of Social Science can effectively tackle obstacles, foster team inspiration, and discover fulfillment in their role as a department head. By focusing on these strategies, the Head of Social Science can navigate the challenges of departmental management, inspire their team, and find fulfillment in their leadership role.
- The points I'll delve into encompasses:
 - Fostering staff motivation
 - Implementing strategic approaches for introducing novel subjects, like accelerated business studies
 - Sustaining enthusiasm for the content
 - Ensuring regulatory compliance
 - Remaining knowledgeable and engaged
 - Exemplifying leadership through personal conduct

Testimonials

Thomas Gerard Mae, Executive of the Teacher's Guild of NSW

- Ian is an outstanding educator with the capacity to provide opportunities for his students to be confident in their capacity to learn and to be positive about how they will contribute to the world beyond school. By virtue of his knowledge of curriculum, pedagogy, and assessment Ian has a reputation for academic excellence within schools and in the broader educational community.
- As a Head of Faculty Ian has a proven record of leadership entailing the modelling of good practice, the professional development of his staff, the mentoring of experienced and less experienced teachers, and through the reflective nature that he approaches his role. Many of his staff have benefited from his guidance and taken on significant roles in education.
- I am proud to refer Ian Moore to you as an educator with the capacity to provide high-quality professional development, as a mentor of other educators, and as a person of unquestioned quality.

Julia Anstey, Visiting Academic Fellow, Barker College.

- Ian has a unique way of teaching for deep learning and academic success and is a skilled motivator for teenagers. His textbooks are highly regarded and our students at Barker have benefitted from their wisdom. His enthusiasm for learning and unique ability to help students solve problems and put in place workable study routines is admirable. Ian has the gift of getting alongside even the most recalcitrant teenager to inspire curiosity, motivation, and an internal spark that flows over into other academic areas.